Q&A with the study's co-author

Dr. Jennifer Deters is the director of the Intramural Center for Youth Gambling Problems and High-Risk Behaviors at McGill University in Montreal. She was interviewed in 2009 by 12 NCAA coaches and members of the Providence College Athletics Department Info web site. The following questions were asked:

Q: What are the social planning trends you’re seeing at your center?

Q: What about other trends or concerns?

Q: What about the technology? I was just going through social media with one of my students.

Q: Simultaneous forms of gambling – often referred to as “hybrid gambling” – have been introduced online where one can play in an online or virtual setting while perhaps watching something else or doing something else. Do you consider this to be problematic gambling?

Q: What do students accept when they’re preventing a problem from getting worse?

Q: Do you observe any interesting phenomena on campus?

Q: What about the exception studies and occurring?

Q: What do students accept when they’re preventing a problem from getting worse?

Q: Do you observe any interesting phenomena on campus?

Q: What is your advice for colleges and universities now?

Q: What’s your approach on campus to problem gambling?

Q: Do student-athletes have a better understanding of how gambling works?

Q: What’s your approach on campus to problem gambling?

Q: Do student-athletes have a better understanding of how gambling works?

Q: What are the most important changes in research on student-athlete gambling?

Q: What’s your approach on campus to problem gambling?